

On Martin Luther King, Jr. Day and on the eve of Barack Obama's Inauguration

The Special Individualized Programs (SIP) of Concordia's School of Graduate Studies

http://graduatestudies.concordia.ca/programs/SIP

presents a lecture by

Charles E. Cobb, Jr.

Brown University

 $http://www.brown.edu/Departments/Africana_Studies/people/cobb_charles.html\$

FROM MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR. TO BARACK OBAMA

January 19, 2009, 8:30 p.m.

Concordia's Hall Building, Room H-937 1455 De Maisonneuve Blvd. West info: reiss@alcor.concordia.ca

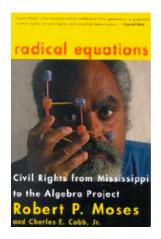

Co-sponsored by Concordia's African Student Association, Linguistics Student Association, Carribean Student Association, Political Science Student Association

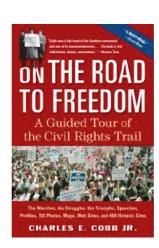

Charles E. Cobb, Jr. is a distinguished journalist and former member of National Geographic Magazine's editorial staff. He currently is Senior Writer and Diplomatic Correspondent for AllAfrica. com, the leading online provider of news from and about Africa.

From 1962-1967 he served as a field secretary for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) in Mississippi. He began his journalism career in 1974 as a reporter for WHUR Radio in Washington, D.C. In 1976 he joined the staff of National Public Radio as a foreign affairs reporter, bringing to that network its first regular coverage of Africa. From 1985 to 1997, Cobb was a National Geographic staff member, traveling the globe to write stories on places from Eritrea to Russia's Kuril Islands. He is the co-author, with civil rights organizer and educator Robert P. Moses, of Radical Equations, Civil Rights from Mississippi to the Algebra Project. In January 2008 he published On the Road to Freedom: A Guided Tour of the Civil Rights Trail.

"With vivid storytelling rooted in his experiences as a civilrights activist and a solid grasp of history, Cobb skillfully guides us through many significant places and introduces us to the people of a period that transformed the nation."—William Raspberry, Pulitzer Prize-winning columnist and author of Looking Backward at Us

"A rare opportunity to walk through the pages of history with a man who was there. A window to a not-sodistant past, it reveals the heart and soul of a movementthat transformed America"—Rep. John Lewis

www.concordia.ca