Introduction

The Progression of Learning for the Elementary English as a Second Language (ESL) Programs reaffirms the crucial role that knowledge plays in the development of the ESL competencies. This document is a supplement to the existing ESL programs. The Progression of Learning presents in detail the Essential Knowledge sections of the ESL programs. It provides teachers with a framework to include the necessary elements of knowledge when planning the development of the ESL competencies.

The Progression of Learning respects the categories that constitute the Essential Knowledge sections of the Elementary ESL programs. In Cycle One, the categories are: Contextual Language, Strategies and Cultural Elements. In Cycles Two and Three, the categories are: Functional Language, Strategies, Language Conventions, Text Components and Cultural Products.

The Cycle One program reflects research that shows that young learners benefit more from living the language than from learning about it. Cycle One students are drawn to the rhythmicality[1] (i.e. sounds and stress patterns, intonation, rhythm and pace) of spoken language, their primary source of input, and try to make sense of what they hear in order to participate actively in classroom life.

In Cycles Two and Three, students continue to build their knowledge of English in order to become better communicators. The Elementary Cycles Two and Three program is based on the communicative approach. Research shows that learners need to be given numerous opportunities to practise and use language in meaningful contexts. Furthermore, learners benefit from explicit focus on form linked to these contexts.

The symbol → used in the Progression of Learning chart for Cycle One has a different connotation from the same symbol used in the general legend. It signifies that students are becoming aware of new knowledge while developing the competencies To act on understanding of texts and To communicate orally in English. The symbol is used to link elements of essential knowledge in the Cycle One program with corresponding elements in the Cycles Two and Three program. It is clear that Cycle One sets the stage for the development of the Cycles Two and Three competencies: To interact orally in English, To reinvest understanding of oral and written texts and To write texts.

> . . . communicative competence should be the goal of language education,
> S. J. Savignon

1   The term rhythmicality is used in the Elementary Cycle One program. It appears in the article "Poetry and Song as Effective Language-learning Activities" by Alan Maley (Rivers, Wilga M. Interactive Language Teaching. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994, p.93.)

English as a Second Language

Category 1 - Contextual Language and Functional Language

Children are focused on what this new language can actually be used for here and now.
H. Douglas Brown

In the Cycle One program, contextual language refers to students' personal language repertoire of words, strings of words and short expressions that they build and use at their own pace to help them develop the competencies To act on understanding of texts and To communicate orally in English.

In the Cycles Two and Three program, functional language allows students to interact in English by producing stretches of speech starting in Cycle Two. Useful expressions (routine formulas and patterns learned as ready-made, whole chunks) and vocabulary (meaningful units of language) make up Functional Language. Useful expressions and vocabulary contribute to developing the competency To interact orally in English. Vocabulary also supports the development of the competencies To reinvest understanding of oral and written texts and To write texts.

Learning context is a feature found in the ESL Progression of Learning chart that describes the conditions under which students progressively construct knowledge throughout the cycles. It highlights the differences in the learning environments as defined in the Cycle One and the Cycles Two and Three programs.

Elementary Cycle One Learning Context

Cycle One
Mostly natural emergence of the English language through the use of authentic songs, rhymes and stories, and participation in classroom routines
Elementary Cycles Two and Three Learning Context

Cycle Two
Creation of a personal repertoire of functional language by participating in classroom routines and through tasks mostly pertaining to familiar environments (e.g. school, home, neighbourhood, family)

Cycle Three
Development of a personal repertoire of functional language by participating in classroom routines and through tasks often pertaining to topics with a broader scope (e.g. ecology, heroes, children from other countries)

Category 2 - Strategies

> Language learning strategies are steps taken by students to enhance their own learning.
> Rebecca Oxford

In the Cycle One program, strategies refer to compensatory (i.e. communication) and learning strategies. Students reproduce actions modelled by the teacher to discover how strategies can help them become successful learners. Compensatory strategies and learning strategies contribute to developing the competency To communicate orally in English. Learning strategies also help develop the competency To act on understanding of texts.

In the Cycles Two and Three program, the same strategies, compensatory (i.e. communication) and learning, help develop the ESL competencies. As the cycles unfold, students broaden their repertoire. They can name the strategies, select and apply those appropriate for tasks, and reflect on their effectiveness. Compensatory and learning strategies contribute to developing the competency To interact orally in English. Learning strategies also help develop the competencies To reinvest understanding of oral and written texts and To write texts.

Learning context is a feature found in the ESL Progression of Learning chart that describes the conditions under which students progressively construct knowledge throughout the cycles. It highlights the differences in the learning environments as defined in the Cycle One and the Cycles Two and Three programs.

Category 3 - Language Conventions

. . . grammar is closely tied into meaning and use of language,
and is inter-connected with vocabulary.
Lynne Cameron

Learning language conventions using a communicative approach involves activities that focus attention on form in context in order to facilitate the understanding and the expression of accurate and meaningful oral and written messages.

In the Cycle One program, although there is no Language Conventions category, students discover the phonology, the music or rhythmicality[1] of the language, and develop an ear for English through listening to a variety of songs, rhymes, stories and authentic audio-models.

In the Cycles Two and Three program, language conventions refer to grammar, phonology, punctuation and spelling. Grammar contributes to developing all three competencies. Phonology supports the development of the competency To interact orally in English. Punctuation helps develop the competencies To reinvest understanding of oral and written texts and To write texts, and spelling pertains exclusively to the competency To write texts.

Category 4 - Text Components

All texts provide cues to help the reader understand what the author wants to communicate.
Literacy for Learning

In the Cycle One program, text components are found under "Language related to songs, rhymes and stories" of the Contextual Language category. Text components consist of key elements and main events in texts that are worked on orally with the support of the group. Key elements and events help develop the competency To act on understanding of texts. There are no expectations in Cycle One for students to read texts on their own.

In the Cycles Two and Three program, text components refer to connecting words, contextual cues, overall meaning and key elements. Prior to listening to or reading texts, students use contextual cues to anticipate the content of texts. While they are listening to and reading texts, students use connecting words, key elements and overall meaning to further construct meaning. Text components contribute to developing the competency To reinvest understanding of oral and written texts.

Learning context is a feature found in the ESL Progression of Learning chart that describes the conditions under which students progressively construct knowledge throughout the cycles. It highlights the differences in the learning environments as defined in the Cycle One and the Cycles Two and Three programs.

The Cultural Elements category is at the heart of the Cycle One program and, makes learning meaningful for young language learners. This category consists of authentic audio-models as well as songs, rhymes and stories selected from a repertoire of authentic texts created for English-speaking children. This category enhances the development of the program's two competencies.

In the Cycles Two and Three program, the Cultural Products category consists of texts, media, games, famous people, origin of names, landmarks, traditions and idiomatic expressions from various English-language cultures. Cultural products enhance the development of the three competencies by making English come alive in the ESL classroom.
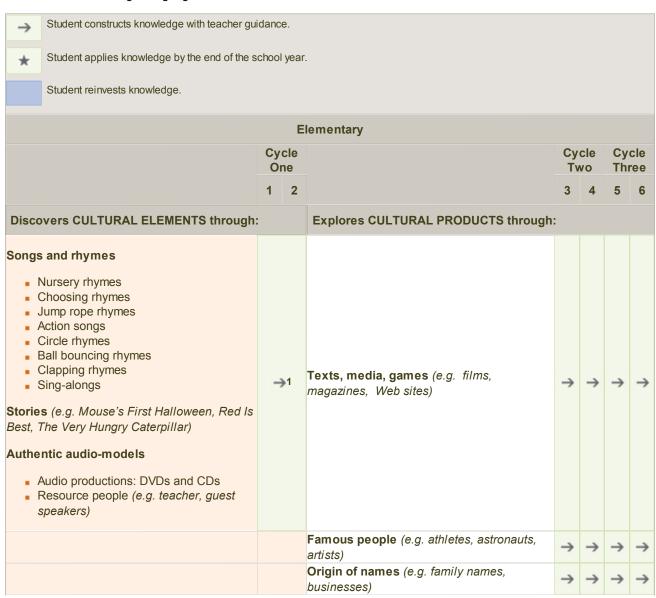

Learning context is a feature found in the ESL Progression of Learning chart that describes the conditions under which students progressively construct knowledge throughout the cycles. It highlights the differences in the learning environments as defined in the Cycle One and the Cycles Two and Three programs.
