

Abstract

In the first part of the talk, I will discuss how the Standard Model of particle physics has been built during the second half of the last century. Next, I will describe why going beyond the Standard Model is needed before detailing, in the last part of the talk, how beyond the Standard Model predictions at particle colliders can be achieved (in the aim of being compared with CERN's Large Hadron Collider data).