the reader great detail about the 1890 fire that consumed the main University College building, more than 30 pages before Richardson gets to adduce its construction!

In Chapter 3, Richardson discusses in considerable detail an interesting Greek Revival scheme for a predecessor college. This discussion concerns an institution somewhat different from that which University College finally became, and it documents a project of which only a fragment was built and of which today nothing whatever remains. This earlier "University of King's College" project certainly merits close examination, and (to this reader, at least) is a real "find," but its introduction here only adds to the confusion of the reader. Then, the undisciplined mix of data pertaining to the institution and of data pertaining to the buildings tends to satisfy neither type of reader. Only in Chapter 4 does Richardson finally get to the construction of the building whose destruction was chronicled two chapters before.

The delayed account of the existing college building is not entirely satisfactory. There is, first of all, an unfortunate clash between the text and the visual information throughout the volume. University College is heir to a group of highly interesting architectural designs that many other institutions might well envy. This does not mean that so many of them ought to have to be set before the reader, particularly as they are here thrown into a hodgepodge of designs for other comparable buildings, such as the University Museum at Oxford or the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. The confusion is only compounded by a strange editorial decision that each caption should emphasize most prominently the source of the illustrated material, and only secondarily give the name of the material itself. Thus fig. 4.14 is prominently captioned UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY but only in rather small letters does the reader learn the structure viewed stands in Oxford. The proofing of the volume was less than rigorous also, since an illustration intended for page 116 enigmatically appears on page 48 instead.

Ecological activists work under the motto: "Think globally, act locally." Architectural historians should be guided by the same philosophy when they write, since the act of publication is by nature a "global" act, and there ought to be no bounds to the audience to which a book should aspire. A Not Unightly Building does the reverse: it acts globally and thinks locally. Such a handsome and even lavish book anticipates a wide if not global distribution. But the thinking is local. It treats of a building that has major significance - Canada's Smithsonian Institution, let us say. But it does a disservice to its subject to treat it with such methodological casualness. If University College is as good as this book claims it is, why not make this claim in the most convincing manner possible?
