UNIVERSITY OF OTTAWA (Ottawa, ON)

Part-Time Lecturer, Department of Geography, Environment and Geomatics, 2019

1. ENV 3101: Legal Context of Environmental Issues

The broader objective of this course was for students to be able to describe, explain and analyze how global and local environmental issues are regulated by legal institutions and frameworks. More narrow objectives included: the role of environmental law in the Canadian legal system; Identification, summarization, and evaluation of the legal approaches to environment case law; The role and function of environmental regulatory and assessment laws; And demonstration of how operational policies and managerial approaches are influenced by the legal standing of the environment and natural resources.

Part-Time Lecturer, Institute of Women's Studies, 2013-

1. FEM 3104: Feminism, Justice, and the Law

In this course, we examined the gendered aspects of legal institutions. This entailed impressing on the students the position that law forms a backdrop to negotiations about our sexualities and our sexed and gendered identities. The same course also explored how the law both produces and regulates our sexual subjectivities and gendered selves as good/bad, healthy/harmful, and natural/unnatural. Our case studies drew on critical race, gender, sexuality, legal theories, criminal and constitutional law and cases. The rationale for structuring the course in that manner was due to the belief that one's sex, gender and sexuality cannot be divorced from other axes of identity, such as race, class, and disability. In other words, an intersectional analysis of identity and oppression is needed in our study of criminalized sexual identities and practices.

EDUCATION

Concordia University. Individualized Program \(INDI\) (formerly known as Special Individualized Program (SIP) Ph.D. (2009).

Thesis title: "Aristophanes' Acharnians: Pursuing Peace with an Iambic Peitho"

Supervisors: Prof. Horst Hutter, Concordia University, Prof. Charles Blattberg, Université de Montréal, Prof. Franziska Schlosser, Concordia University.

External Examiners: Prof. Tom Darby, Carleton University, Prof. Nikos Pouloupoulos, McGill University.

Concordia University, Department of Geography, MA (2002).

Thesis: Native Women the Built Environment and Community Well-Being in Two James Bay Cree Communities.

Supervisor: Prof. Monica Mulrennan.

My thesis examined the well-being and the built environment. This involved quantitative and qualitative research fieldwork at the James Bay Cree (Eeyou Istchee) communities of Eastmain and Ouje Bougoumou. As part of the same research, I conducted in-depth interviews with the renowned Anishinabe architect Douglas Cardinal and senior Policy Analysts of CMHC at their headquarters in Ottawa. My research was funded by the Department of Indian Affairs (now CIRNAC). An offshoot of the same research explored restorative justice, which culminated in guest lectures and policy work with the Aboriginal Justice Directorate, Department of Justice (Ottawa, Ontario). This entailed supporting hundreds of community-based justice programs in collaboration with Indigenous communities.

This article addresses the extent to which ancient historical actors might be seen to have exhibited in the light of modern game theory-rational motives. In particular, it examines several strategic interactions employed by the last Athenian tyrant Hippias in his interactions with Aristogeiton, the protagonist of an unsuccessful coup d'état that eventually paved the way for the emergence of Athenian democracy in the figure of Cleisthenes the Democrat.

Drawing on the works of Herodotus, Xenophon, Plato, and Aristotle, we construct a general picture of tyranny, as the Greeks used the term, and set out some of its salient characteristics prior to offering a comparative analysis of Donald Trump and tyrants in archaic Greece. Similarities under question include: demagogic roots, contempt for laws and established practices in governing, a preference for pliable and loyal subordinates, ostentatious lifestyles, and lurid tales of sex. Differences between ancient tyrants and Trump include the fact Trump appears to share numerous shortcomings but few of their virtues.
